It is simply not possible to argue that building homes to the current required standards (without zero carbon homes or even negative carbon homes) can be compatible with the stated desire to "Minimise carbon emissions and other pollution" Phil Taylor, head of engineering at Newcastle University. has previously said that "We have unambitious building regulations, and our drive to phase out petrol and diesel cars by 2040 is too late." This plan is a classic example of literally cementing in those poor standards. It will allow developers to build to poor ecological standards on Green Belt land without insisting on the kind of active transport measures that will actually compel people to abandon their cars. The UK was the first major economy in the world to pass laws to end its contribution to global warming by 2050 this plan is in direct contravention of that law and is therefore unsound.

This is not the kind of robust wording that will compel the developers to deliver the kind of robust and sustainable car free development that we were led to believe would be insisted on in the Examination in Public. Words like "are likely to include:" will be dismissed as unviable and the whole plan will fall between two stools. We will end up with a road network that doesn't function and active travel links that aren't used. "A new pedestrian and cycle bridge across the A40" is presented as a singular entity that will totally insufficient to facilitate active travel from the entire span of the site and absolutely no feasibility studies have been completed to demonstrate any of these aspirations are workable. I suggest that 2 (vi) is deleted and the alternative wording is added: The whole of STRAT 13 will be an entirely car free development.

The wording here is totally insufficiently robust to guard against the irreparable damage that will almost certainly be caused by the proximity of this site to the SSI Natural England and BBOWT are opposed to the development and there is idea that the "The masterplanning of any development here should TAKE INTO ACCOUNT the recommendations of the Council's Ecological Assessment is laughable. More than a quarter of UK mammals face extinction. A quarter of moths have been lost, and nearly one in five butterflies. Their numbers continue to plunge. We are on the precipice of an ecological meltdown and this plan ignores that and asks us to TAKE ACCOUNT of an assessment. There are serious concerns about the independence of the Environmental Assessment that has take place and until a comprehensive and truly independent review can be carried out and verified by Natural England this site should be considered unsound.
